Educator Stresses 'Worth Of Child' During Elementary P-TA Address

"The worth of every child" was a recurring theme in the address of Bernard Taylor, Supervisor of State Elementary Education, to the PTA of Appomattox Elementary School on October 15.

"Focus On the Child"

In his address, Taylor emphasized that "every child in a democracy is of worth." He said "this cannot mean the same education for every boy and girl and that our main goal in education should be the child's "growth in self confidence and self respect so that he can think for himself."

He pointed out that the "world has moved swiftly into the age of space" — that present day children will live in a world "unknown to us parents and teachers."

Taylor said that there is real danger that pressures to meet our needs in science and mathematics fields "may destroy the balance needed in the rest of our national life."

Teachers in the Elementary School have a particular contribution to make during the early developmental years of children, said Taylor. Good teaching is based on understanding the learning process. Good teachers accept all children emotionally, he added. Good teachers see behavior of the children as a symptom of underlying causes. A teacher's philosophy must include a belief that every human being is of value, and that all children can make a contribution to society.

"Strain and tension may be a block to learning," he said.

A Good Day

In order for a child to have a good day at school, Taylor said, that child should have a sense of his own personal worth plus a feeling of adequacy to learn. The child must achieve more success than failure. A Good Day for a child, he said, should include a "place to live" (the school room), "materials to use", "adults who understand, "a plan for growth", "a plan to help him grow stronger in every way" — " a feeling that the world wants him and needs him."

For the teacher, Taylor said, a Good Day should include his or her own self confidence that he can meet the demands of the day, a "trust in himself that he can teach", and — a trust and faith in others so that whenever a child needs more than the teacher can give him, such help will be available. Also, the knowledge that the teacher has done the best he can.

"Warmth" — "play with people who are friends. "Help when it is needed" — Praise"—and the "Promise of a good day tomorrow" are ingredients to a successful school experience, said Taylor.

"Good education is challenging, not frightening," he said. "We're getting Big," he told the P-TA, "and individual identity is going to get lost." He urged teachers and parents to remember each child as an "individual" who needs the preservation of the sense of "self." "Every child", he said, "is of intrinsic worth."

Book Fair Set November 13-19

The Appomattox Elementary School Library will sponsor the annual Book Fair November 13-19. Approximately 500 different book titles will be on display in the school library for the pupils and parents to inspect. The Book Fair will be the program of the evening for the P-TA meeting Thursday, Nov. 19.

Mrs. Virginia Beard, the librarian, will be glad to take orders for any books which people may wish to purchase. The profit made from the sales will be used by the library for additional purchases of books.

The Book Fair is made possible through the Educational Reading Services of the Scholastic Magazine.

Last year $402.36 worth of books were sold. From this amount, the school realized a profit of $30.47. The main purpose in having the Book Fair is to give children the experience to handle and see books firsthand and to also encourage parents to give books as gifts for Christmas.
